Re-visit

The apostrophe is a small punctuation mark that sits above a letter in a word. There are two important uses for the apostrophe:

1. To indicate belonging (the possessive)

Examples: These are the student's books.

Maria's assignments were overdue and she was really worried.

2. To indicate that something has been left out of a word or number.

I don't catch the bus to school.	Don't = do not
The last time I caught the bus was back in '99.	' 99 = 1999

Words like don't, what's, it's are known as contractions.

Please note that contractions are not used in academic writing!

Apostrophe denoting possessive: whose?

Here the apostrophe shows who owns something.

Ask yourself whether it is a plural or singular noun and use the apostrophe appropriately:

Use's if there is only one (singular).	The student's questions — there was one student asking questions
Use s' if there are more than one (plural).	The students' questions – there were several students asking questions
Use 's after irregular plural nouns	Children's questions – there were several children asking questions

It's or its?

1. It's is always a contraction, like don't or isn't.

It's a lovely day.	It's = it is
It's got four legs.	It's = it has

2. Its = a possessive pronoun like yours, his, hers, theirs or ours.

Example: The school and its furniture look new.

Quick tips

Quick tips

Apostrophes are used in contractions (is not = isn't). Full forms (not contractions) are usually used in formal academic writing.

Check if apostrophes are used appropriately with singular and plural nouns to show possession (Tom's chair or all students' assignments).

It's means "it is" or "it has".

"Its" is a possessive pronoun (like "hers" or

"yours").
